The Dresden Exhibition of this year is especially rich in sculpture. Reinhold Begas, of Berlin, has sent among other work a plaster cast of his Kaiser Friedrich sarcophagus. Franz Stuck of Munich has sent in "A Fighting Amazon," "The Athlete," "The Centaur," and a "Tänzerin." Bermann has "The Dying Sphynx," Flossman the marble bust of Beethoven; and further work exhibited by Adolf Hildebrand, Hermann Hahn, H. Lang, von Gossen, Heinrich Epler, Robert Diez, who has received the commission for the Bismarck Memorial at Dresden, Johannes Schilling, Karl Seffner of Leipzig, all among the best noted sculptors of Germany.

A Lukas Cranach exhibition is connected this year with the Dresden Kunstausstellung.

The Leipzig Museum has recently purchased from the artist Alf. Bachmann a large marine, showing a sunrise over a low seacoast, with strong surf running.

The correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung gives a lengthy description of the festivities attending the unveiling of the Velasquez statue before the Prado in Madrid, on occasion of the three-hundredth anniversary of his birth.

A few days previous the Velasquez Salon in the Museum had been opened, devoted to the works of the greatest Spanish painter, who was both "naturalist" and "idealist." In adjoining galleries are those paintings of which the genuineness is dubitable, while photographs of all the works of Velasquez not in the Prado are exposed in the corridors.

An alleged new Raphael picture has been discovered at the Exhibition of Sacred Art at Como. In one of the galleries of the exhibition there is a picture representing "The Massacre of the Innocents" belonging to Dr. Biondi, of Pavia. A number of artists, attracted by the beauty of the painting, formed a committee to examine it attentively. The surface of the canvas was carefully scratched in the spot where the signature was expected to be, and below the varnish was found the signature Raph. VRBI, and the year MDX. The picture would therefore belong to the beginning of the last decade of Raphael's life, he having died in 1520. It is believed that the picture was bought toward the middle of the seventeenth century at a sale of a cardinal's possessions.

The sale of three Rubenses, formerly belonging to the late Sir Cecil Miles, and of certain noted pictures by the great Italian masters, was one of the recent events in London. "The Holy Family," by Rubens, was sold for 8,500 guineas; "The Conversion of St. Paul" for 1,950 guineas; and "The Woman Taken in Adultery" brought 1,950 guineas. "The Conversion of St. Paul" was sold in 1866 for 4,000 guineas and some time later for 3,300 guineas.

At the sale "A Portrait of a Gentleman," by Frans Hals, brought 3,000 guineas, and "A Portrait of a Lady," by the same artist, 2,000 guineas. Romney's "Portrait of Mrs. Frances Newbery" brought 1,650 guineas. Hopper's "Portrait of a Lady," supposedly Shelley's first wife, 1,380 guineas.

Edwin A. Abbey has nearly finished the six panels which are to complete his series of the Holy Grail in the delivery room of the Boston Public Library. The new subjects are: (1) The head of the knight being borne aloft on the charger, as Galahad had seen in the procession of the Grail; (2) the fight with the Seven Deadly Sins; (3) the castle of the Maidens and their release; (4) the Castle of the Grail, visited once more by Galahad, who this time does not repeat his arrogant silence of years ago, and so, breaking the tearful spell, confers the blessing of death upon the aged, hollow-eyed King, Amfortas, with whom pass away all the enchantments that had oppressed the land of Britain; (5) the episode of the ship, and (6) the fastening and setting up of the Golden Tree.

A collection of twenty pictures by Italian masters, most of them borrowed from private galleries, has been on exhibition at the Agnews's, in Old Bond Street. The masters include Raphael, Botticelli, Pulzone, Pesello, and Cima da Conegliano. Referring to the collection, the Daily Mail says: "Not one of the canvases can be passed by with indifference; there is an atmosphere of stateliness about these masterpieces of mediæval art which inevitably makes one sorrow over the decadence of the modern Italian school of painting. Methods and schools come and go, but the great masters remain. In the Middle Ages painters took themselves and their profession more seriously and conscientiously than is the case nowadays. And socially the painter held a unique position in the community, so much so that at one time he was exempt from the sumptuary laws."

The "Luminarist" exhibition held recently at the Paris Durand Ruel Galleries has called forth in the Revue Blanche an article by M. Thadée Natanson on the very comparison I made some time ago between Corot and the Impressionists. The plea for broadness of view in art is well made and ably sustained, and the time is announced to come when all art, whatever form it takes, which gives the mysterious appeal to the senses as well as to the mind, shall be recognized for its worth, spite schools and administrations, aside from academic lines and abstract principles.
